

Today is the lucky day to realize

Yesterday, the zipper on my body pillow broke, and bits of cotton were spilling out.
To sew up the tear,
I threaded the extremely narrow hole of a needle and put it on a PC in another location.
But when I was about to prepare the body pillow, I couldn't find the needle I'd used to thread it, and the next day, today, I found it in the middle of the white sheets on my bed.

I was lucky...today is the day I realized that.

By the way, as for the cover,
I've recently been able to thread a thick thread through an extremely narrow needle eye in one go, even though it would normally be impossible to thread by eye.
The thin, diamond-shaped metal tool used to thread a needle eye has long since broken and is no longer in use.